ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

SPRINGFIELD, May 19.—The Republican State Convention was called to order at noon by A. M. Jones, and G. B. Raum was unanimously chosen chairman. Thousand of people who came to the city for the purpose, were unable to gain admission to the hall, only 600 tickets being issued. Jones made a speech extolling the record of the Republican party in Illinois.

Gen. Raum, in his speech, asserted that with unity of action the Republicans could, without a shadow of doubt carry the election, but with the division which is now imminent on account of the two contending delegations from Cook county there was peril to the greatest interests of the State and nation. He referred to the bitter and personal contest respecting Presidential delegates, but said the Convention would decide justly, without partiality, on the rights of the contestant, and that the decision ought to be final, and readily concurred in. He said that if the party was always to be menaced by defeat by a minority who failed to dictate the nomination, the sooner it went into bankruptcy the better. He referred to complimentary terms to Sherman, Blaine and Grant, but expressed the belief that it was the duty of Illinois to nominate Grant, who had done so much to preserve the country. The name of Sherman was loudly cheered, Blaine still more loudly and Grant with continued applause.

The usual committees were then appointed and the Convention adjourned until 5 o'clock.

The impression is very general here that Grant will capture the delegates.

POLITICAL SOUNDINGS.

"S. J. T."—Your joke about being a candid date is good, but the managing editor thinks it smacks too much of taffy and refuses to run it.

A Philadelphia paper has at last discovered a candidate so available a substitute for Tilden that it kicks boldly clear of Samm's traces. The new candidate is worth $12,000,000; his other name is not yet known, but he can safely be considered the Democratic favorite.

It is stated that Tilden's friends are making efforts to induce Senator David Davis to take the second place on the Presidential ticket, in the hope that the combination will carry Illinois.

Stanford was quite right when he said that the Republicans are stronger on the Pacific coast than they were four years ago.

The indications are that Nevada will send Tilden delegates to the Cincinnati Convention, while California Democrats are likely to instruct for Thurman.

An old and wealthy Boston merchant has a room containing many mirrors, reaching from floor to ceiling. Therein he sits, and as he starts an ancient music box he calls in his servants, who dance while he sits sipping brandy or punch.

An Irish gentleman in London being told by an officer of a bank that he had overdrawn his account replied that he was not in the habit of twitting them when he had money in their vaults, and he did not want to be twitted by them when he had none.

Well-Paid Lawyers.

[From the New York Times.]

The British Government places a high value on the services of lawyers in the Cabinet, and pays them more handsomely than the other members. The Lord Chancellor, the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General each has a higher salary than the Prime Minister or the Secretaries. The Lord Chancellor receives $50,000 a year, the Attorney-General $40,000, and the Solicitor-General $35,000, while the Premier is paid $25,000 yearly, which is also the salary of the Exchequer, and the Home, the Foreign, the Indian, the Colonial, and the War Secretaries. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland receives $100,000 per annum, and the Chancellor of Ireland $40,000. Judges are also paid very large salaries in England—just of Lord Chief Justice being $40,000, while the ordinary Justices of the Court of Appeals and of the High Court of Justice get $25,000 a year each. No public law officer in the United States is paid anything like the amount named. The Chief Justice of the United States receives $10,500 a year, which is $500 more a year than is given to each of the Associate Justices. The salary of the Attorney-General of the United States is $3,000. Some of the New York Judges are better paid than the members of the United States Supreme Court, but their salaries are vastly below those of the English Judges.

A London physician cured a lady of deafness by taking her into the Cathedral tower near one of the bells as the hammer fell upon it. The force of the sound fractured the obstruction to the ear.

THE DARK DAY.

When Our Forefathers Thought Judgment Day Had Come—Description of a Notable Event in New England History a Hundred Years Ago.

Yesterday, May 19th, was the one hundredth anniversary of what is known in the histories of the New England States as "The Dark Day." All of the local historians, and the numerous learned gentlemen of leisure who kept diaries in those days, which have since given us a perfect knowledge not only of the customs, but even of the thoughts of those sturdy lovers of freedom, have more or less to say about this phenomenon. It left a lasting and vivid impression upon those who happened to be its witnesses. For several days before May 19, 1780, there had been hanging over the whole extent of country between Casco bay in Maine and Danbury, Conn., a mass of smoke and vapor, and greatly obscured the sky, and through which the sun and moon looked like

A GREAT CLUT OF BLOOD.

Impending over and ready to drop upon and overwhelm the earth. This gloom gradually grew more oppressive. Heavy clouds gathered on the horizon, especially along the south and southwest. By Thursday afternoon, May 18th, the wind had ceased almost altogether to blow, and a heavy smoky smell and sensation of smothering oppressed the chests of the inhabitants. On Friday morning, the eventful day, the sun appeared redder than usual, but a light breeze sprang up and drove the clouds over from the south and southwest, and by 9 o'clock the sun was hardly visible. At this time it began to shower, the smoky odor increased, and the clouds continued to gather in great masses, hurried now by a strong upper current. It grew constantly darker, and a cold chill seemed to creep over the earth. From every direction farmers and laborers were hurrying, with looks of fearful inquiry in their faces, toward their homes. By 11 o'clock it became so dark that it became necessary to light candles. Confused groups were hurrying from street to street with the old-fashioned lamps, by which it was their custom to light one's way on dark nights, in their hands. In many houses frightened members of the household, as the darkness increased, fell upon their knees, under the impression that the last day had arrived, and invoked the divine pardon. To add to the general confusion, the brute creation seemed crazed by an extraordinary terror, and their piteous cries increased the

GENERAL DISMAY.

Horses neighed, cattle lowed, chickens sought their roosts and the cock's shrill crow and the claxon answer announced that even they were deceived into supposing that night had arrived. Towards 12 o'clock the slight rain entirely ceased. At 1 o'clock a glimpse of light, which had continued in the east, disappeared, and, though it seemed impossible before that the darkness could be greater, it now became impenetrable. Toward 3 o'clock a slight glimmer of light appeared in the west, and the motion of the clouds overhead could be seen. It resembled the movements of smoke when confined within a bottle and agitated by vapors, only its inky blackness and position overhead made it appear like an enormous black wing that might with one swoop hush man from the face of the earth. When the darkness first began to gather, some men who were working on a ship in Waterbury, Massachusetts, harbor, desired to cease work, but on account of the urgency of the contract they were not allowed to do so. It then became necessary to furnish them with candles, and the dull reverberation of their hammers in the heavy atmosphere and the faint glimmer of their lights as they worked in the yards produced a most weird and thrilling impression upon those who were near. As the clouds rolled one way and another, owing to the failure of a strong wind to drive them, quick flashes or convulsions appeared on their edges, not unlike the aurora borealis. As the afternoon waned it became lighter; but the approach of evening restored the darkness. The wind now rose; but the masses of cloud still rested over the earth, and

THE NIGHT.

Was perhaps the darkest that has ever been known in history, although the moon had filled but the day before. Between 1 and 2 o'clock the wind became powerful enough to drive the clouds away, and the next day everything was restored to its original condition, except the presence of a strong odor as of burnt leaves.

For years the "dark day" was a theme of wonder to those who witnessed it, and but few ever arrived at a true explanation of its cause, the general supposition being that it was an inexplicable miracle.

But there is every reason to believe that the cause is known. For days before forest fires had devastated vast sections of thickly timbered country which is now almost altogether under cultivation. The preceding signs of the "dark days" was but the smoke and vapor wafted by the winds. The rain-water which fell on the day, when caught in tubs or other receptacles, was covered with a black scum, which upon examination proved to be black ashes of burnt leaves, and had the same smell as that which had pervaded the atmosphere. The theory was then formed that the vast body of smoke from the burning woods had mixed with the common exhalations from the earth and water, and that it had been condensed by the action of wind from opposite points.

But no such explanation as that would convince many who regarded the phenomenon as a warning to the sinners of the earth, and many yet read of the great "dark day" as one of the inexplicable freaks that man can never fathom.

Edmund Yates says that the wife never lived who did not receive with feelings of eager anticipation the news that one of the ambitions of her husband's life had been accomplished, and that he had elected a member of the best club in London.

BUSINESS BEFORE CONGRESS.

[Correspondence N. Y. Herald.]

The resolution fixing the day of adjournment was not offered to-day, because it was suggested by the Committee on Appropriations to try first what could be done by meeting an hour earlier on and after the 15th inst. It was agreed, that after that date the daily sessions of the House should begin at 11 o'clock. In order to show the condition of the appropriation bills by comparison a statement has been prepared showing the dates at which the appropriation bills went through both houses at long sessions of different Congresses, commencing with the Forty-second Congress: The long session of the Forty-second Congress adjourned June 8, 1872; of the Forty-third on June 23, 1874; the Forty-fourth on August 15, 1876; and the Forty-fifth Congress June 20, 1878. The earliest date at which the long session adjourned since the Forty-second Congress was June 8, and in every case the Legislative bill, which always excites much controversy, was reported at an earlier date than this year. A further comparison shows that in the year of the Presidential nomination the sessions of Congress have been unusually long. There is very little prospect, therefore, of an early adjournment this year. Precisely what benefit it will be to the members of the political parties to adjourn on the 1st of June has not yet been explained. The Chicago Convention will meet on the 2d of June, and the Republican members of the House would be absent at the most important time of the session if they went there. The Democrats say that they have enough to do to look after their Congressional nominating conventions, and are therefore anxious to get away at an early date. The Senate shows no disposition to hasten legislation. The Senate Appropriation Committee finds it necessary to devote much time to a careful revision of the appropriation bills as passed by the House, and does not take kindly to the suggestion that it shall hurry up the work because some one wants to get away before the sweltering weather sets in. There is, besides, considerable general legislation, contested election cases, the revision of the tariff, the river and harbor appropriation and many private bills which members are anxious to have acted upon in both houses, believing that the short session will be full of political and Presidential troubles. Some rule has got to be agreed upon at this session for counting the electoral vote, and all this will consume time.

FEMALE GUZZLERS.

Drinking Habits of Some of the Women of New York.

I would not go so far as to say that New York ladies drink to excess, supposing that public drinking is permissible in a lady at all. But I do say and see that ladies here are drinking a great deal of both wine and spirits. Young ladies—not fast girls—when shopping go into Bogot's, or Parrell's or Delmonico's and order a "hot Scotch" with a little hesitation as a Grand Rapids lady would order a pound of tea. I have noticed this habit for several years, and have written about it in New York and Boston papers. I have read what others have said concerning the matter, and I believe observing men generally will agree that the custom is growing. Yet every time the subject is raised in the papers there is a great hue and cry and the thing is denied very persistently. Notwithstanding the rows a public mention of the evil has already caused, I affirm, of my own knowledge, it is true. I don't know that I have often seen ladies intoxicated here, save at Liederkrantz or Aron's balls, but I have seen hundreds of them drink freely. I am not writing of drunkards, now, but of women who drink wine or something stronger every day of their lives, at home or abroad. That there are hundreds of women here, in good society, too, who are drunkards, there can be no denying. A lady whom I have known for ten years has died since I was here last Summer, from the effect of hard drink. She was a beautiful woman, and as brilliant as she was bad. Nevertheless, society in the metropolis has not ceased mourning for her yet. I know whereof I affirm when I say that beer is the most popular beverage in New York to-day. A glance at the tables in Koster & Bial's, "Theater" or any of the public or private places here, will convince the most credulous. You will see as many women as men enjoying to foaming cup. At the hotels or in private houses, unless wine is commonly used you will find beer to be the ordinary drink. The other afternoon I sat in the saloon of a little German hotel on Fourteenth street, talking with an actor whom Grand Rapids knows, and to whom it delights to give big houses, when a nice looking, middle-aged lady, dressed in widow's weeds, entered the hotel, sat down at a table, and drank a glass of beer with evident relish. I should not have noticed the circumstance particularly if she had been one of a party, but drinking her beer in such a solitary way seemed a little out of the usual course.—[N. Y. Co r.]

AN IMMENSE STOCK OF GOODS.—Isaac Barnett has received his Spring stock. The selection is superb; all latest fashions, novelties, and fancy articles, dress goods, trimmings, can be seen and those who have taken a glance at the goods admit that no stock of goods has ever been brought to Reno so magnificent and abundant as this; even the ladies from the East, at present sojourning here admire the assortment and are astonished to find goods in prices very near comparing to those from their own home. Give it a trial; it is a establishment a cal ladie, you will not regret it.

BARNUM'S BIG SHOW.

How the Immense Caravanary is Transported Through the Country.

[From the New York Star.]

"The greatest show on earth" (Barnum's) took its departure last evening from the Mott Haven Depot of the New Haven Railroad Company for Bridgeport, Conn. After a week's successful playing in Brooklyn, the veteran Barnum goes to his native town, where a right royal welcome awaits him. To-day will be for Bridgeport a sort of Fourth of July, with unlimited enthusiasm and no firecrackers. Every man, woman and child is on the quiver, and the veteran showman, believing that "forewarned is forearmed," has in store a speech that will electrify not only the townsmen out the world generally. All through Saturday night and Sunday morning the work of removing the colossal circus from the Capitoline Park, Brooklyn, to the depot the other side of Harlem Bridge, when on, wagons of all kinds, ornamented and plain, drawn by all kinds of horses, wended their way toward the ferry. People who were out scarcely knew what to make of it, and thought that "they had them again" or something was wrong with the country. On landing at Twenty-third street the wagons, vans, trucks, carriages and other vehicles which are the necessary adjuncts of the show, proceeded to Third avenue, and thence across Harlem Bridge. The grounds around the railroad depot yesterday resembled a grand camp. There were five great canvas tents, 130 feet long by 30 wide, in which the 300 horses of the caravanary were located. The men who attended them slept peacefully in the tents, tired by their night's work, and the steeds enjoyed the bonituous provender set for them.

One large tent was called "The Hotel," for here everything that the most fastidious could desire was ready or to order. When it is considered that the company numbers 350 souls, and each one gifted with a hearty and healthy appetite, it is apparent that the hotel did not lack for custom. The railroad coaches used to transport the crews all belong to the company, and each one bears the legend, in very large letters:

"P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth."

The passenger cars bear the same inscription, and are painted the same claret brown color as the ordinary coaches. The others are painted a light blue, with red borders. The scene around the depot yesterday was one not often witnessed there. Long lines of railroad cars were strung out on the tracks. On the open trucks were the vans used by the company, in which were the animals. The sides of these vans were covered with tarpaulin, and the air was let in from the top. The small boy was present "by a large majority," and the stray policeman was kept busy in preserving the trunks of the elephants, the nose of the giraffe, the snout of the seal lion, the claws of the lion and the tail of the tiger.

The greatest crowd congregated around the caecose in which the elephants were placed. The animals quickly discovered the square holes in the car, and soon several "trunks" were flapping around in search of charity. It came from the small boy in the shape of cinders, stones, old iron and such luxuries, when a stampede occurred owing to the arrival of the keepers and a mounted policeman. Quite a little excitement was caused when a lion, that was screened from observation, gave vent to a roar which could be heard half a mile off. The longers around that cage made a break for Harlem Bridge, and did not look around to see what was after them. The camoleopard was in a box by himself, and to accommodate his attenuated neck, a canvas top was placed over his wagon. He astonished the spectators by poking his nose through the canvas. He received so much attention that he modestly withdrew from the scene. The gorgeous chariot in which the band performed during the processions in the various cities, was carefully covered over, as were also the company.

Mr. Louis June, the agent of the circus, was on hand, and saw that everything was in its proper place. Mr. Peter Husted, the transportation master, had his hands full, while Baggage-master George H. Wade, had more baggage than he could smash in a month, provided he was inclined that way. Mr. G. F. Bailey, Mr. A. M. Nathan and Agent Starr were present and lent their aid to get the mammoth show under way. There were in the train seventy-eight cars, and it took four powerful engines to draw the load of wonders. The train was the largest ever seen on the New Haven Railroad, and was nearly three-quarters of a mile long. The start was made at 7.30 p. m., and the assembled multitude gave a hearty cheer as the great show moved away.
